That protection, however, rests upon our constant vigilance....to ensure that equality under the law means equality under the law for everyone....You may find my actions immoral or unjust, but attempting to restrict my freedoms, in ways that you would not restrict your own, leads only to injustice.

Throughout history, those in authority have tried to repress ideas that threaten their power, their religion, their ideology or their re-election chances....

We cannot deny others the rights and privileges that we demand for ourselves; that is true in cities, and it is no less true at universities, where the forces of repression appear to be stronger now than they have been since the 1950s....

In the 2012 presidential race, 96 percent of all campaign contributions from Ivy League faculty and employees went to Barack Obama. That statistic, drawn from Federal Election Commission data, should give us pause....When 96 percent of faculty donors prefer one candidate to another, you have to wonder whether students are being exposed to the diversity of views that a university should offer....

[T]he whole purpose of granting tenure to professors is to ensure that they feel free to conduct research on ideas that run afoul of university politics and societal norms. When tenure was created, it mostly protected liberals whose ideas ran up against conservative norms.

Today, if tenure is going to continue to exist, it must also protect conservatives whose ideas run up against liberal norms. Otherwise, university research will lose credibility. A liberal arts education must not be an education in the art of liberalism.

This spring, it has been disturbing to see a number of college commencement speakers withdraw, or have their invitations rescinded, after protests from students and—to me, shockingly—from senior faculty and administrators....

In each case, liberals silenced a voice... they deemed politically objectionable.

As a former chairman of Johns Hopkins, I believe that a university's obligation is not to teach students what to think, but to teach students how to think. And that requires listening to the other side, weighing arguments without prejudging them, and determining whether the other side might actually make some fair points.

"Well-Shampooed Squirrels"

I first came to Harvard Business School 13 years ago. I remember the first few minutes after arriving on campus at Spangler. After confirming that...this truly was the "student center," I...inspected the marble fireplace near me, sat on a beautiful leather couch, put my feet on the finely crafted coffee table, watched the well-sham-pooed squirrels happily prance outside in the lawn, and told myself, "Yes, I think this should do just fine."

Noble Professions

And now, with this diploma in hand, most of you will go on to the noblest pursuits, like helping a cable company acquire a telecom company. You will defend BP from birds. You will spend hours arguing that the well water was contaminated well before the fracking occurred. One of you will sort out the details of my pre-nup. A dozen of you will help me with my acrimonious divorce....

Let's be honest: Harvard Law is the best of the Harvard graduate programs. I can say this—we're among friends. The Business School is full of crooks. The Divinity School is just a bunch of weird virgins. The School of Design is like European burnouts. And don't get me started on the Kennedy School. What kind of degree do you get from there—public policy? Right—you mean a master's in boring me to death at a dinner party? I'm sorry. Let's just be honest. The Med School is just a bunch of nerdy Indians. I can say that!... The rest of you are out of line. That's racial—how dare you.

After You, Alphonse

Michael Bloomberg visited me in my office at the Radcliffe Institute a few weeks after I had been invited to serve as Harvard's president—and he said that I was much taller than he had imagined.

President Drew Faust

The Honors Dinner, Annenberg Hall
(Their subsequent hug proved the point.)

When Drew makes a fundraising call on you, you have to say yes. I will tell you a quick story. One time, this was 10 years ago maybe, my mother was 98, something like that, and I talked to my mother every day, and I said, "Mother, what did you do today?" She said, "I didn't go out—I had a

If...students graduate with ears and minds closed, the university has failed both the student and society. If you want to know where that leads, look no further than Washington.

In Washington...the two parties decide... questions not by engaging with one another, but by trying to shout each other down, and by trying to repress and undermine research that runs counter to their ideology. The more our universities emulate that model, the worse off we will be....

The Scribe Sums Up

Dan H. Fenn Jr. helped compile the College class of 1944's first report in 1947, when they began on a three-year cycle (versus five years today); it opened with a dedication page listing the 30 classmates "who left the Yard to serve their country and their kind and gave their lives in the fulfillment of that great responsibility." Sixty-seven years on, Fenn, still class secretary, submitted the class's fifteenth reunion report. Taking stock of 70 years, he found:

Around 100 of us became lawyers, and of those perhaps a dozen were judges at various levels. By contrast, well over 150 of us went into business, including many of our Ph.D.s...in various fields of research.... There were around 120 doctors...some dentists, and at least one veterinarian.

JIM HARRISON

In the Harvard tradition, we had around 20 ministers and just short of 100 professors and roughly 20 teachers.... Around 35 of us spent the bulk of our careers in government, with the CIA and the Foreign Service dominating. About a dozen of us were career military; nearly 20 spent their lives in nonprofit organizations....

Many of us had several careers, some at the same time like the man who, while engaged in his business career, taught and played music professionally....

Five of us...won the Nobel Prize. That is really amazing...Phil Anderson, Merton Miller, George Saxton, Lloyd Shapley, and Bob Solow—can you believe it?

...[T]he term "paradigm shift"...came from one of our classmates in a seminal book on scientific revolutions.... We can boast of...the creator of the practice of daily intelligence briefings for presidents, at least two renowned composers, a couple of boat builders, a rancher, a baker, and a barber, the architect of the Capitol...and a courageous key early leader of the Civil Rights movement.

We can talk about one of the nation's first househusbands...several producers and publicists for Broadway shows, a notorious Manhattan Project spy...a leading judge of national, international, and Olympic figure skating...the editor of the International Herald Tribune, a vintner in Switzerland, and a metallurgist with over 25 patents who is responsible for a great many of the items we use on earth and in space today....

In the meantime, we managed to produce perhaps 2,500 sons and daughters—one of us had 14, another 11.

So, in the final analysis, I think we did all right!

visitor." I said, "Who was that?" She said, "I don't remember her name, but she was a very tall woman, and she talked about a scholarship in my father's name at Harvard." I knew exactly who it was, and I thought, "You really have to have a lot of guts to go on a fundraising call like that." It was the most underhanded—and effective—call ever.

In Case Software Doesn't Pan Out

Latin Salutatorian Timothy Barry-Heffernan '14, a mathematics concentrator who also studied computer science, is from nearby Hingham, Massachusetts, and resided in Winthrop House. His talk, De Septuagesima Secunda et Trecentesima Legione ("On the 372nd Legion")—something to do with the number of College classes since Harvard's founding, adjusted for wars and other interruptions (or maybe it is the 373rd: oh, never mind)—obviously called out for a prop. Helmeted, he was quite a sight, pantomiming the basketballers' shooting form: Et denique, in campo ludi canistri, adversarios dignos inusitadosque pugnativimus; sed sicut Ajax et Diomedes et Achilles arserunt in bello, ita Rivardus et Caseus et Currius Cincinnatos illos straverunt! Mirabile visu! ("And, at last, on the basketball court, we fought worthy foes, whom we had never encountered; but just as Ajax, Diomedes, and Achilles raged in battle, so too did Rivard, Casey, and Curry lay low those men of Cincinnati! What a sight to behold!") If his Hewlett-Packard software gig gets stale, he might consider channeling the "King Tut"-era Steve Martin.

Harvard Names, Evolving

My personal connection to Harvard began back in 1964, when I graduated from

Timothy Barry-Heffernan

STU ROSNER

Johns Hopkins and matriculated here at the B School.... I've noticed a few things have changed since I was a student here. Elsie's, a sandwich spot I used to love near the Square, is now a burrito shop. The Wursthaus, which had great beer and sausage, is now an "artisanal gastro pub," whatever that is. And the old Holyoke Center is now named the Smith Campus Center. Don't you just hate it when alumni put their names all over everything? I was thinking about that this morning as I walked into the Bloomberg Center on the Harvard Business School campus across the river.
